SplendorNet tries to build a HOT CV attitude in it's consultants. We always take pride in seeing our team members much ahead of others from the point of view of technologies, personality, performance and behavior.

Honesty

Always, always act ethically. No question, no other choice.

Openness

On the whole, it's far easier to communicate and to get positive results by sharing information freely and openly. This doesn't mean being tactless, or prematurely revealing matters that must be by their nature confidential – people respect that – but otherwise, tell people what you're planning, what you're doing, what your concerns are, and why.

Trust

Trusting other people's integrity, trusting in their professionalism and skills, and trusting people to deliver. This naturally has an equal commitment on us to be trustworthy too. Trust doesn't mean blind abdication – it's earned through proven behavior and results.

Courage

Suggesting and trying new ideas. Making constructive criticism and raising concerns; being receptive when others do so. Having the courage to disagree, explaining our reasoning, without making it a personal attack. Embracing change, persevering against the odds, accepting and working with others' decisions. Walking away when necessary.

Value

Valuing and respecting other people - clients, colleagues and suppliers. Delivering value for our clients, shareholders and colleagues. Receiving fair value for what we do for others. Acknowledging the value of what others do for us.

The skills of our consultants are updated and enhanced through regular training. Consultants are provided with a broad overview of the industry they service and are trained to work with non-IT staff and effectively transfer knowledge to end-users. The seniors are always looking for ideas to bring improvement in the juniors on all the scales.
